GOOD NEWS FOR MOTHER

THE PORTLAND IDENTIFICATION PROVES TO BE MISTAKE.

With the body of his son George Farr will leave Salt Lake today for Clayton, Washington, He identified the corpse last evening. To his old wife he is carrying the news that their boy whom they had believed dead during nine years past, had begun life anew instead of ending it in the waters of the Willamette river.

Farr arrived in Salt Lake yesterday morning. He went to the undertaking rooms of Joseph William Taylor and saw Charles W. Farr's body.

"That is my son," he said. In an interview last evening Farr cleared up the strange circumstances surrounding his belief that the corps he buried in Portland nine years ago this month was that of the man who accidentally shot himself in this city accidentally shot himself in this city eight days ago.

Last Sunday J. E. Walling, foreman of the Utah Fire Clay company, at the request of Charles Farr, whom he then thought to be dying in the L. D. S. hospital, wired George Farr the circumstances. It was the first time Charles Farr had spoken of his parents. He had never written to them nor heard from them. He had a $1,000 insurance policy in favor of his mother.
When George Farr got the message

When George Farr got the message in Clayton, Washington, he believed some impostor was trying to pass himself off as his son. But he came to Salt Lake. Meantime his son died, knowing that the father had identified the body of another as his.

Story of the Father.

George Farr's story follows: "Years ago, before I went to Oregon, my son came to Salt Lake City. He worked here twice. Both times I sent him money and he came to me. I was then in the state of Washington near Gray's harbor, logging. In 1894 during the hard times I started a logging camp on the lower Columbia. I was hurt in an accident in the woods. I was finally taken to a Portland hospital near death They amputated my leg. My son and my brother were with me. Believing that I was about to die, and wishing that my wife might enjoy an income from my property, I deeded it to Charley and his uncle.

Charley and his uncle.

"The two of them then ran the camp.
After I got well I went to work making money as best I could. They continued to run the camp. Charley was careless about his money. He was not keeping books. And he was going behind. He kept running behind. This was in 1896. One day he went down to Portland and drew $400. Then he disappeared. That was the last I heard of him until I got this message from Mr. im until I got this message from Mr.

These two years will constitute a critical period in the history of the community, and the voters of all parties feel that they are entitled to know what the head of the city administration proposes to do in this vital matter. The water famine that crippled the city during the summer and fall brings this subject home to the citizens with such force that it cannot be dodged or evaded. Compared with it all other evaded. Compared with it all other, questions involved in the campaign sink into insignificance. All citizens know that Salt Lake can never be a great city; that there can never be manufacturing, an extension business and a large growth of completion with and a large growth of population until an abundant supply of good water for all needs is a fact and not a theory or

Where Mayor Morris Stands.

Where Mayor Morris Stands.

Richard P. Morris stands for the bringing into the city of Big and Little Cottonwood and Mill creek just as fast as the water is needed. He stands for the purchase of this water with the Utah lake water that the city now owns in abundance. He has already secured half the flow of Big Cottonwood, 10,000,000 gallons daily in the driest season of the year, and he is pushing negotiations for a much greater supply. The taxpayers have voted him $850,000 to carry out his purpose. There are now 200 men at work constructing a conduit from the Big Cottonwood to the city. The contract calls for the completion of this conduit July 15 next. This will make a repetition of this year's famine, with its attendant suffering and discomposit this year's famine, with its attendant suffering and discomfort, an impossiollity so long as water flows down hill

The complete emptiness of the stomach during sleep adds greatly to the amount of emaciation, sleeplessness and general weakness so often met with. There is a perpetual change of tissues in the body, sleeping or waking, and the supply of nourishment ought to be somewhat continuous and food taken just before retiring, adds more tissue than is destroyed, and increased weight and vigor is the result. Dr. W. T. Cathelt says: "All animals except man eat before sleep, and there is no reason in Nature why man should form the exception to the rule."

If people who are thin, nervous and sleepless would take a light lunch of bread and milk or oatmeal and cream, and at the same time take a safe, harmless stomach remedy like Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets in order to aid the stomach in digesting, it, the result will be a surprising increase in weight, strength and general xigor. The only drawback has been that thin, nervous, dyspeptic people cannot digest and assimilate wholesome food at night or any other time. For such it is absolutely necessary to use Stuart's-Dyspepsia Tablets, because they will digest the food, no matter how weak the stomach may be, nourishing the body and resting the stomach at the same time.
